

Subject Intent:

The history curriculum at Castle Mead Academy sets out to promote both ‘Discipline and Discovery’, as advocated by Ben Walsh. It exists, within the wider Castle Mead curriculum, to; enlighten our young people to the stories of the past, develop a love of learning these stories and establish, through a unifying, local lens, a shared appreciation of our island’s journey as well as promoting the history of the wider world. Additionally, and most importantly, it equips scholars with powerful knowledge of our past, telling both the well-told and underrepresented stories of our history. History at CMA strives to allow all our scholars to engage in the discourse and practices of educated people, so that they can gain the powers of the powerful.

The entire curriculum is be underpinned by Four Questions which we shall return to regularly to provide cohesion: three discovery of knowledge and one disciplinary:

1. How were people ruled during this period? (monarchy / parliamentary democracy etc)
2. How did people live during this period? (jobs, social etc)
3. What did people believe during this period? (religion / politics etc)
4. How do we know about this period / topic? (The mechanics of History)

Implementation:

This intent is achieved via a curriculum which:

- builds a secure schema of disciplinary knowledge (first order, substantive, concepts) including parliament, monarchy and democracy which thread through the curriculum so that they become what Christine Counsell refers to as ‘residual knowledge’, a permanent reservoir which will provide a context for studies across time (and across academic years).
- provides a curriculum that develops young historians, by interleaving not only subject knowledge but also second order concepts, so that identifying causation, change and continuity, and engaging with the process of historical enquiry and historian’s interpretations become established, learned processes, which become more challenging throughout the five years of the curriculum.
- models the process of scholarly historical enquiry so that both source enquiry and evaluation of historian’s interpretations shall be embedded throughout.
- presents content not as one master narrative but rather the exploration of constructed pasts, both British and International, for that is history.
- weaves a golden thread of “local history”, including site visits that develop cultural capital, that builds cohesion across the Castle Mead population and unifies us around our shared heritage of Leicester City.
- avoids relying on History’s ‘Usual Suspects’ and presents, where possible, a diverse range of voices from history and challenges ‘populist narratives’.

History topics are taught via a series of short, focussed enquiry questions, designed to retain focus and our students’ attention over 5 or 6 weeks. They are conceptually based around the ‘Big Questions’ academic historians engage in eg; “How should King John be remembered?” rather than “what were the causes of the Magna Carta?”

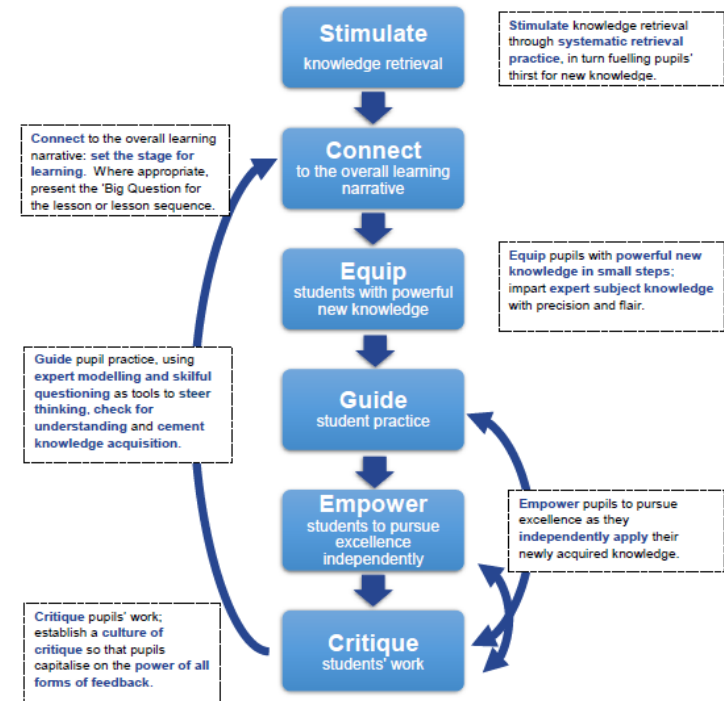

Individual lessons and series of lessons will be constructed in line with the Castle Mead Teaching and Learning Policy.

To support this, History Lessons will:

- Include opportunities for Retrieval Practice modelled on the work of Kate Jones
- Be clearly presented, to avoid cognitive overload and promote retention, in line with the suggestions of Oliver Caviglioli and Daniel Willingham
- Include opportunities for dual coding, as proposed by Oliver Caviglioli
- Provide a clearly narrated story of the past, alongside opportunities for modelled scholarship and historical writing, advocated by Dan Warner-Meanwell:

Big Question: What was the impact of the Roman's on British society?
Story Create a title for each paragraph. This text explains what it is that historians do and how they tell the story of the past. Summarise in 1 or 2 bullet points.
Following the Roman invasion of Britain, the Roman army oversaw the rapid construction of a network of roads. These allowed troops, messengers and officials to travel quickly from ports to the rest of the province. One of these roads which still exists today (in part) is Fosse Way, linking Exeter to Lincoln via Leicester. As a result of this road network, many small towns grew in the south of England. This opened up markets for goods and produce, as well as entertainment. Public baths, such as those at Jevry Wall (the remains of which are still visible today) were built, whilst other settlements saw the establishment of amphitheatres (some so big they could hold up to 5000 people), where people could watch gladiatorial contests or wild animal shows. Towns were run by the local aristocracy – they settled local disputes and collected taxes. These taxes were used to improve the towns but the system would often become corrupt. After 300AD, the government in Rome became much more authoritarian and most of the tax collected went to the Roman army, and towns suffered as a consequence. The Roman invasion also saw an introduction in new foods to Britain, apples, cherries, lentils and walnuts. However, these new foods were mostly eaten by those that could afford them, and were mostly eaten in the south of Britain.	Source A Scientific tests in 2009 on her skull suggest that she was a mixed race woman of North African descent. She, or her parents, had come from North Africa. Source B This is a facial reconstruction of a skull found in the south of England. Beachy Head lady lived around 125-245 AD and is of African descent. Tests also show she had a good diet which suggests she didn't live life in a lowly position or as a slave. Source C A dedication to the God Jupiter by Roman soldiers of the 'Aurelian Moors' unit. The word 'Moors' tells us that these soldiers were from Northern Africa and guarded the western end of Hadrian's Wall between 253 and 258 AD. Scholarship Dr Miles Russell in a podcast for BBC History magazine in 2020 The Romans weren't very successful in the grand scheme of things – at the end of Roman Britain things are pretty much the same as at the beginning... You've got small tribal elites, you've got people fighting one another, you've got a disconnected and broken down society. None of the Roman traditions, laws or language actually survives.	A photograph of the skull of Ivory Bangle Lady, who was discovered in 1901. Scientific tests carried out on her skeleton suggest she lived in Roman York. She was also found with a number of luxury grave goods e.g. silver and bronze lockets, earrings and bracelets – on made of African ivory. These suggest she was a woman of high social status.
Activity 1 Read through the Story of Roman Britain. For each paragraph, you need to create a 'title' on one side, and a short summary (two bullet points maximum) on the other.	Activity 2 Look at sources A, B and C. In your book; <ol style="list-style-type: none"> (I Do) How does the evidence suggest that Roman Britain was multicultural? (WE Do) How does this evidence support the BBC interpretation of African-Roman soldiers in Britain, which you saw in the film clip? (YOU Do) How does the evidence challenge the idea that immigrants were of low status, male and likely to be slaves? 	Activity 3 Read through Dr Miles Russell's scholarship about the legacy of the Romans on Britain In your book, answer the question, 'What impact does Dr Russell think the Roman's had on Britain?'

Invigorating Instruction
Lessons characterised by rigour, depth, drive and clarity of purpose

The 'Story, Sources, Scholarship' model enables students develop their understanding of the discipline of being an historian through engaging with a clear narrative overview of events, relevant primary sources, and the views of eminent historians. It is, therefore, a curriculum with 'scholarship at its heart'. This model combines ideas shared by @SPBeale and @mrfitzhist and is underpinned by research (see Teaching History - TH)

- In TH99 Riley suggests that a single enquiry question driving pupil's work with a collection of sources models the unfolding process of evidential reasoning.
- 'What's the wisdom on evidence and Sources?' in TH176 explains the importance of giving students opportunities to examine carefully curated collections of sources, ensuring that they have a clear contextual narrative within which to place them.
- Further research can be found in; 'What's the wisdom on interpretations of the past?' (TH177) Reisman; 'Teaching students to think like historians'.
- Foster (TH142) 'Passive receivers or constructive readers?'

Furthermore the 'Story / Source / Scholarship' approach incorporates 'Guided Reading' as part of the 'Story' element. Guided Reading is an approach to reading that scaffolds pupils' thinking in how they analyse a body of text. It also helps with note taking from a piece of text.

Research to support this approach can be found in;

- Chang & Ku (2014) have shown that note taking from reading improves student learning. It also shows that note taking requires effort and encoding which stores the information more firmly in long term memory.
- Boyle (2013) shows that getting trained in specific note taking strategies can significantly improve the quality of notes and the amount of material remembered later.
- Reynolds (2016) shows that adding a skeleton framework for notes greatly increases engagement with note taking and the quality of notes overall.

Impact:

Key Stage 3 Endpoint:

Scholars at CMA will:

- have secure, 'powerful' substantive knowledge, in order to be able to engage with further study and the wider world
- engage with interpretations from academic historians that will allow them to grapple with these constructed pasts
- develop as young historians
- be ready, willing and able to pit historians against each other!
- be able to question the world around them and engage in the discourse and practices of educated people . . . having gained the powers of the powerful!
